

LAERTE J. SILVA

TRADUÇÃO . INTERPRETAÇÃO

<http://www.ljstraducoes.com>

Writing a paper in English?

Does this sound familiar?

You wrote a paper, you submitted it to a journal for review and it was rejected? Are you discouraged? Has it been sitting in the drawer for many long months... but you still believe the topic is important, the content relevant, and you want to get it published? Or are you plainly overworked and don't have the time to translate or proof read and edit it? A graduate student wrote a paper and you can't find the time to correct the language?

What do you do?

Call or write me and see how I can help you in your writing efforts. I'm specialized in translating and proofreading academic papers for publication. I have worked translating, proofreading and editing academic papers in several areas since 1992 for professors of the major public universities, some under service contract. I translate, proof read, and edit an average of 50 papers a month.

Let me help you too get your paper published.

Whether your manuscript is accepted immediately or the referees recommend revision, the service fee covers revisions of minor corrections and the letters to editor and referees. My objective is the same as yours, to get your paper published.

How much does it cost?

Less than the time and effort wasted attempting to publish a paper that needs improving. Furthermore, you may include translation and proof-reading service fees for publication in international journals in your research project or use CNPq/CAPES, workbench grants, or other research grants to pay for it.